

Coffee in France

- Espresso (Café):
 - Description: A small, strong shot of coffee. This is the most basic and common type of coffee in France.
 - Serving: Served in a small cup, usually 30-50ml.
- Café Allongé:
 - Description: An espresso with added hot water, similar to an Americano but typically weaker.
 - Serving: Served in a larger cup than an espresso, with a volume of about 100-150ml.
- Café Noisette:
 - Description: An espresso with a dash of hot milk, similar to a macchiato. The name "noisette" (hazelnut) refers to the color rather than the flavor.
 - Serving: Served in a small cup.
- Café Crème:
 - Description: Similar to a cappuccino, this is an espresso with hot milk and a little foam.
 - Serving: Served in a large cup, often around 150-200ml.
- Café au Lait:
 - Description: Coffee with hot milk, usually prepared with a brewed coffee rather than an espresso. Commonly enjoyed at home for breakfast.
 - Serving: Served in a large cup or bowl.
- Café Americain:
 - Description: Similar to an Americano, this is an espresso with a lot of hot water, making it weaker and more similar to traditional American drip coffee.
 - Serving: Served in a large cup, around 150-200ml.
- Café Décaféiné (Déca):
 - Description: Decaffeinated coffee, available in various forms such as espresso, café crème, or café allongé.
 - Serving: The serving size depends on the type of decaffeinated coffee ordered.
- Café au Lait:
 - Description: Coffee with hot milk, typically made with brewed coffee rather than espresso. Often consumed at breakfast.
 - Serving: Served in a large cup or bowl.
- Café Viennois:
 - Description: An espresso topped with whipped cream, similar to a Viennese coffee.
 - Serving: Served in a medium to large cup.
- Cappuccino:
 - Description: Although Italian, cappuccino is popular in France and consists of equal parts espresso, steamed milk, and milk foam, often topped with cocoa powder or cinnamon.
 - Serving: Served in a large cup.
- Café Serré:
 - Description: A very short and strong espresso, with less water than a regular espresso.
 - Serving: Served in a small cup, typically 15-20ml.

Understanding these different types of coffee can enhance your experience when ordering coffee in France and help you choose the perfect option to suit your taste.
